MATURE WORKERS STILL DELAYING RETIREMENT — AND GETTING HIRED

Workers age 60 and older are still delaying retirement, despite a slightly better economic outlook over the past few years. Of the 53 percent who are delaying, 28 percent are doing so because “they enjoy where they work,” and 26 percent “fear retirement may be boring.”

More employers are hiring these older workers, thankfully. Fifty-four percent of private-sector employers hired workers age 50 and older in 2014 — up from 48 percent in 2013 — and 57 percent plan to do so in 2015.

OVERHEARD

"They are your company's support staff. And though you may not interact with them every day, a new CareerBuilder survey suggests they may know more about you than you think. Fifty-three percent of support staff workers have overheard confidential conversations at work, according to the survey, and 11 percent of support staff workers have stumbled upon information that could cause someone to be fired."
