How to Magnetize Your Firm for Business Leaders

In a competitive job market, the battle for legal talent extends beyond attorney recruitment.

In the legal industry's battle for the best, most of the firepower has been directed toward attracting top-level associates and lateral hires. But there's another, less visible, struggle going on for the hearts and minds of business service professionals. Where are the super candidates for positions in IT, accounting, marketing and administration? And are law firms even on their radar?

Those questions have risen in importance in recent years as organizations of all kinds encounter elevated requirements for enlightened process innovation.

"Law firms have evolved to being sophisticated businesses, with top-level positions in all areas taking on more authority and having seats at the decision-making table," says Kathleen T. Pearson, SPHR, Chief Human Resources Officer at Pillsbury Winthrop Shaw

"Business professionals are the secret weapons at many law firms. They help distinguish the organizations
